Vrtba garden

Vrtba Garden is one of the most beautiful baroque gardens in the Czech Republic, despite its small size. Located on the side of Petřín Hill, it's full of terraces, statues, and gorgeous views of the rooftops of Malá Strana.

It was designed as part of Count Vrtba's palace by architect František Maxmilián Kaňka. He skillfully overcame the challenges of the garden's limited space and steep terrain. Although situated in the city center, the garden offers serene compositions blending rooftops, sculpture, and greenery across several terraces. Its clever spatial design and use of perspective give the illusion of bigger size and depth.
